Center of Excellence

The Center of Excellence in Diversity in Medical Education, or Center of Excellence (“COE”) is a champion of diversity in the field of medicine, working to eliminate health disparities through advocacy and outreach within the health community, academy and industry:

- Community: Health education, outreach and service opportunities for premedical and medical students
- Academy: Outreach to Bay Area two-year and four-year postsecondary institutions including pre-medical advising, workshops and presentations on medical school admissions, health disparities, leadership in the health profession, and careers in medicine. The Stanford University Minority Medical Association pre-health conference
- Industry: Research, summer and other employment opportunities, internships and other experiences that encourage students to develop a more complex understanding of medicine as a career and an avenue to address and eliminate health disparities

The Center of Excellence in the Stanford School of Medicine promotes the development of physician leaders who will be capable of serving, improving and advocating for the health of the nation’s diverse populations. This goal is achieved by offering opportunities for research, community involvement, workshops and conferences that contribute to the development of aspiring physicians at the undergraduate level. These offerings include:

- Outreach programs to students considering careers in medicine and other health professions
- Leadership development opportunities including a pre-medical leadership conference
- Volunteering in a healthcare environment
- Professional and academic resources
- Opportunities for mentorship in medicine
- Community engagement
- Guest lectures and workshops at Bay Area colleges and universities and on the Stanford campus
- Outreach and recruitment in the Bay Area
- Pre-health peer networking opportunities
